ST. THÉRÈSE OF THE CHILD JESUS (of Lisieux) (1873-97) – Thursday, October 1
She became a Carmelite nun when she was fifteen and diligently carried out the austere life of a Carmelite; dying of tuberculosis when twenty-four. Her fame came about because of a rather short book; The Strong of a Soul, which she had been ordered to write, It is still in print and tells us that holiness can consist in offering "little flowers" to God, as a child might do. So she is sometimes called "of the Little Flower of Jesus". She had longed to be sent to a mission country (today's Vietnam), but her health did not permit this. Because of this, she was named patroness of the Missions in 1927.
